

Digital Asset Investment

Pecu Novus is unique in nature, it is a store of value just as one would view gold or like alternative assets, PECU is an asset backed digital asset that can be used as a form of asset investment in a company. Just like stocks, bonds, gold and other alternative assets being held by companies and shown on their audited financial statements, digital assets like PECU are also able to be shown as an alternative asset on a companies audited financial statements.

As with any store of value, whether it be digital or physical, the possibility of it accruing in value over time is solidly there, that key word is “VALUE” and with the PECU supply being capped at 100 million, it adds a supply and demand scenario to the equation in the future.

The United States Internal Revenue Service clearly states that digital assets, such as PECU, are considered an alternative asset and subject to capital gains tax upon liquidation. The United States Securities and Exchange Commission accepts audited financial statements incorporating digital assets. So the value of PECU as a digital asset investment in a company is evident.

There are a number of ways that PECU can be used in business, from real estate purchases, acquisitions, escrow for import/export, asset investment in companies and so much more. PECU holders are using it as it was intended, as a digital asset that can be used for many business transactional situations.

Since PECU is a digital asset that has a blockchain foundation, all transactions are clear, secure and permanently recorded with agreement information detailed within the block. All business to business PECU transfers are at no cost on the Pecu Novus Network, so from placing PECU in the escrow account to making the entire purchase or investment utilizing PECU eliminates the need for unnecessary transactional fees.

These are just helpful hints on how to leverage PECU holdings for digital asset investments in companies.

This document is for informational purposes only, it is highly recommended that you seek professional legal and/or accounting advice.

PECU NOVUS

